Abstract. Panel vector autoregression (PVAR) models have been increasingly used in applied research. While progress significantly improved in the last decade, their results are often confused as standard VARs in most empirical papers. Panel VAR model estimation and inference are often implemented with generalized likelihood ratio tests, maximum likelihood estimation. In this article, we briefly discuss panel vector autoregression, maximum likelihood estimation, and estimation of autoregressive distributed lag models in a panel context. Estimation of panel VARs and panel VARs with distributed lag autoregressive moving average. We illustrate the great power of program by using standard time series.

Keywords: VARs, panel VARs, maximum likelihood estimation, maximum likelihood, panel vector autoregression, PVAR, dynamic panel.

1 Introduction

Panel vector autoregression (PVAR) models (applied to the econometrics literature) are an extension to multivariate autoregressive models (ARs) (Tsay, 1997) and suitable to a time series panel. Usually, treated as autoregressive distributed lag models based on identified panels or the structural form. They can be estimated by maximum likelihood method of maximum likelihood (ML) (Tsay, 1997) and maximum likelihood (ML) (Tsay, 1997) (Tsay, 1997) panel VAR models. Panel VAR models have been used in multiple applications across fields.

In this article, we briefly review panel VAR model estimation, maximum likelihood, and other methods in a generalized method of moments (GMM) framework and provide a package of programs which are efficient using time series data. We discuss the panel VAR model estimation (panel VAR) and maximum likelihood (ML) estimation of panel VARs in maximum likelihood estimation. This article illustrates an efficient package of programs
