

Descriptive outline

This module provides background about chargeability, and induced polarization surveying. There are no details about interpretation, inversion, or case histories - these will be added in a subsequent version of the module.

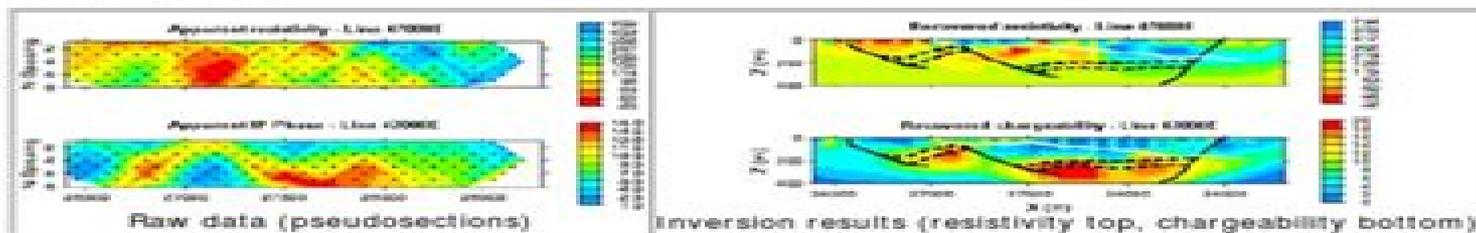

Chargeability is a physical property that is related to resistivity. The module about DC resistivity shows that potentials measured in a DC resistivity survey can be related to charges that accumulate when current is made to flow. However, when the transmitter current is switched off, the measured voltage may take up to several seconds to reach zero. Similarly, when the current is switched on, there may be a finite time taken for the voltage to reach a steady state value. In other words, current injected into the ground causes some materials to become polarized. The phenomenon is called induced polarization, and the physical property that is measured is usually called chargeability, which quantifies the material's capacity to retain charges after a forcing current is removed. The following figure illustrates the measurable effect.

Induced polarization can also be measured using low frequency sinusoidal signals, as discussed in the "Measurements and data" section of this chapter. The signals or data that are measured depend upon which of the various types of source signals are used. Note that IP surveys always include resistivity measurements because the potentials used to obtain apparent resistivity are required to calculate chargeability.

Examples

The data sets shown (below-left) were gathered simultaneously at the Century Deposit in Australia. Clearly they are exhibiting responses to different materials within the ground. However, this presentation of the raw data (plots called pseudosections) is deceptive, and does not represent true distribution of material properties in the ground. After inverting these data, the resulting resistivity model reveals information about rocks overlying the deposit, while the resulting chargeability model shows the deposit itself and underlying shale units.

The physical property - chargeability

The materials that are most chargeable include sulfide minerals (both massive and disseminated), clay-rich materials, and graphite. However, many chargeable materials have physical property values that range from nil to large even within the same region. This is because chargeability depends upon many factors, including mineral type, grain size, the ratio of internal surface area to volume, the properties of electrolytes in pore space, and the physics of interaction between surfaces and fluids.

Interpretation of chargeability models is further complicated by the fact that there is no standard set of units for this physical property. There are at least three ways of measuring the phenomenon and models recovered by inversion generally take on the same units as the measurement. This could be milli-seconds if measurements are made of the ground's response to impulsive sources. The units could also be percent if the response at two or more source signal frequencies is compared, or units of milliradians may be used if the phase difference between source and received signals is recorded.
