Zager, 2022-06-24 This textbook describes in detail the process of cancer metastasis from a single cell in the primary site through its arduous journey to the sentinel lymph node as the main gateway and beyond to distant sites The most up to date knowledge on key topics in the molecular biology diagnosis and treatment of metastatic cancer is highlighted by a large panel of experts The book begins with a comprehensive overview of the genetic and molecular mechanisms that promote or inhibit cancer metastasis through lymphatic pathways to lymph nodes or through vascular pathways to distant sites providing the reader with an essential basic knowledge This is followed by further details on the role of the immune system within the primary tumor and the lymph node and the importance of the microenvironment at the metastatic site The role of the sentinel lymph node in cancer metastasis is emphasized Special attention is also given to state of the art imaging techniques for the detection of early stage cancer and cancer metastases as well as the use of liquid biopsies in sarcoma prostate gastrointestinal and lung cancer Clinical patterns of malignant tumors arising in different organ systems are compared described and discussed with the goal of determining what similarities and or differences exist The book concludes with a detailed discussion of surgical intervention radiation and systemic therapy of primary and metastatic cancer and briefly previews several emerging topics such as the latest findings on personalized cancer therapy cancer stem cells unique molecular mechanisms of virus induced cancer the impact of the microbiome on cancer metastasis and the application of artificial intelligence in cancer metastasis research By providing fundamental knowledge of the biological and clinical aspects of cancer metastasis this book will be an important reference for cancer researchers clinical oncologists teachers and students Written by experts in the field each chapter includes a summary of the chapter s key points and open ended questions that address pressing issues in the field and encourage the reader to consider future directions

Targeted Immunotherapy for Cancer William Valentine Williams, Karen Anderson, David B. Weiner, Cara Haymaker, 2026-03-17 Immunotherapy has shown great promise in the treatment of many cancers but also suffers from drawbacks such as the development of autoimmunity and lack of efficacy in most forms of cancer In contrast to traditional chemo or radiation therapies that kill fast dividing cells whether cancerous or normal the goal of cancer immunotherapy is to eliminate malignant cells based on their antigenic makeup their tumor associated antigens TAAs or neoantigens Unlike checkpoint inhibition which addresses the ability of cancers to evade an immune response targeted immunotherapies strive to induce a specific immune response to TAAs inducing an immune response targeted to the cancer There are several viable ways to induce an immune response against TAAs including vaccine based approaches which require display of antigenic peptides by major histocompatibility complex MHC molecules Approaches to targeted immunotherapies or therapeutic cancer vaccines have included peptide and protein tumor antigens or neoantigens dendritic cells pulsed with cancer antigens DNA vaccines and whole tumor cells Targeted immunotherapies have been clinically tested against leukemia melanoma pancreatic prostate breast lung and colon cancers While there have been several failed clinical studies there have been notable successes such as antigen pulsed activated dendritic cells in prostate cancer and important insights have been gained One key insight is the ability of cancers to selectively turn off the immune system using immune checkpoints Checkpoint inhibitors such as antibodies to PD 1 PD L1 or CTLA4 show pharmacologic activity in those cancers which have elicited an immune response often regress The pharmacology of targeted immunotherapies relies on their ability to induce a cancer specific immune response This suggests that combination of targeted immunotherapies with checkpoint inhibitors might show synergistic pharmacologic activity in inducing effective anti cancer immune responses

The purpose of this Research Topic will be to probe deeply into the data available and chart the path forward for targeted immunotherapies Article types will include Original Research articles Reviews and Opinion Hypothesis papers Specific areas will include human clinical data clinical trials and pre clinical animal studies Sub topics for both clinical and pre clinical categories will include cell based immunotherapies neoantigen approaches tumor associated antigens DNA immunogens and other antigen specific approaches Topic Editor William Williams is the president and CEO of BriaCell which is developing a targeted immunotherapy for breast cancer This includes raising money to support research and clinical programs and applying for grants All other Topic Editors declare no competing interests with regards to the Research Topic subject
