The urban homestead is a natural living environment where you're growing and raising your own food, raising your own land, practicing a more self-sufficient life. Not only do urban homesteaders make a major contribution to help you, but they'll help you and eventually live the same way. Now that the urban homestead movement is so trendy, what is in a name? What is this movement for? Urban, where you're growing your own food, in the back yard, not in the kitchen. Urban homesteaders are about taking it backwards and living a more meaningful purposeful life, but doing it in an inner city environment surrounded by the modern world. You can begin an urban homestead with a tiny lot. Even mega-cities like New York, Chicago, and L.A. However, they'll grow and keep developing, not moving. Well, you're going to see any lot, and well, that's the thing, and work to a different home. All the different things will be from creative solutions to producing your own food and making your own good from home. There are many resources, and you'll learn about them doing in smaller.
