

Evolution & Natural Selection

DOODLE NOTES

GENETIC Evolution

natural selection changes the range of traits in a population - there are 3 ways it can change. Let's look at a moth population that shows

An example of natural selection!

A population of light brown moths with an allele for dark wings. They have two alleles.

A crow says 'Cool!' next to a DNA helix.

A hawk says 'Wow! Cool!' next to a hawk.

A hawk says 'NOOOOOO!!' next to a hawk.

The moths with dark wings are camouflage against the dark rock where they live.

The light brown moths are more likely to get eaten - they are the birds' favorite!

A higher proportion of black moths are produced, meaning on the beneficial allele.

Over time, the population has changed as 10% more of the moths have black wings.

Stabilizing

Stabilizing selection represents the graph - σ^2

GENE FLOW

What is it?

movement of genes in or out of a population happens through movement of individuals. This can bring new alleles into a population or change the frequency of existing alleles.

Example:

Population 2

Imported alleles is introduced into individual differently together.

Evolution by natural selection

Describe the theory of natural selection and how this theory was first conceived (thought of).

An English naturalist named Charles Darwin went on a voyage around the world. He noticed that animals in similar environments had similar characteristics. For example, in the Galápagos islands, Darwin observed similar but non-identical species of finches on each island. He noticed that their beaks seemed to be adapted to their food source. After some time thinking and the work of other scientists, Darwin developed his theory of natural selection.

Individuals with favorable traits survive and reproduce, passing on those traits to their offspring. Over time, the population becomes better adapted to its environment.

Individuals with unfavorable traits are less likely to survive and reproduce, leading to their elimination.
