Introduction

Normative Decision Theory	Descriptive Decision Theory
Normative Decision Theory: How should we make decisions when there are multiple options available to us? Normative Decision Theory	Descriptive Decision Theory: How do we actually make decisions when there are multiple options available to us? Descriptive Decision Theory

Normative decision theory is concerned with how the rationality ideal is reflected in the process of decision-making by providing a model of how we should ideally make decisions.

How do these two (normative) models differ?

1. Normative approaches describe good decision-making as maximizing utility.
 - attempting to maximize a binary property (good/bad)
2. Descriptive approaches describe decision-making as maximizing gains and reducing losses (both are binary values).
3. Normative approaches describe decisions as value judgments to be made by subjective value functions (different individuals can have different functions) (value judgments: subjective assessments).
4. Descriptive approaches describe decisions as the best choice and value-free (no personal or social value judgments) processes.

→ comparing normative vs descriptive decision-making with ideal vs actual decision approaches.

Decision = the result of the decision process (subjective).

Preference = Preference is something that is applied to different options.

Normative Decision Theory

→ Preference = the level of desirability or value assigned to an option based on a person's utility. All utility functions are increasing in the level of options (the more the better). However, you don't like options equally (weighting losses the loss of 100 dollars can be more than the gain of 100 dollars).

1. The focus is on maximizing utility (maximizing a preference) that is, you can choose between two or three options.
2. The focus is on maximizing (that is, choosing an option) instead of minimizing.
