Abstract

African societies and cultural practices over these years had commanded global attention as it concern health conditions of the people. The paper looks at some of these practices (positive and negative) and shows how these cultural heritages in attitudes and behaviors affect the overall progress of the people and society from the Nigerian perspective. The paper which qualitatively x-rays the African societal practices reveals that some of these practices are negatively affecting the lives of women and children and that cultural change and continuities in various angles will go a long way through enculturation to ensure that some of these negative practices are destroyed and new positive ones are enhanced. The paper concludes illnesses/diseases like malaria, typhoid, HIV/AIDS, cultural practices carried on by Africans makes the whole efforts a child's play.

Key Words: Culture, African Societies, Health, Implications and Rural Development.

Introduction

African continent is one of the largest continents of the world and it's a multi-ethnic society with its peculiar nature and diverse practices (Ojua and Omoso, 2012). Also one sees that Nigeria as a country is made up of people from different ethnic groups and cultural practices with the dominant groups being Igbos, Yorubas and Hausas. It has more than 250 ethnic groups with different cultural practices. Some of these cultural practices, which have endured centuries of practice work for the people. It is not uncommon to think of something crude and bad whenever one talks about cultural practices as it concerns health. Not all cultural/traditional practices are bad however, some have stood the test of time and have positive values, others are uncertain and negatively harmful. It is essential to have an idea about cultural practices of some communities because the practices a community adopts fulfill certain purposes for the culture bearers (Iddehen, 2007).

The cultural practices of people not only affect their health but also affect all aspects of life including social relationships, contribution to societal functioning and disease condition. Man living in an interactive society is affected by what happens in his environment and how he reacts to it. All people, no matter the race, have their beliefs and practices concerning health and disease. Each society or community has its peculiar way of doing things and these practices go a long way in influencing the people's perception, attitudes and behavior in the management of diseases and health related problems that befall them (WHO,
