

Special Senses - Vision

Normally, sensory information is transmitted as a message-carrying action potential along the body and distributed throughout. Vision, however, does not carry action potentials along afferent pathways to the brain for interpretation. Thus, there are specializations of the nervous system where the body receives and interprets information on the information very specifically.

Five basic categories of general sensation that occur across the: pressure/pain/temperature/itching, and muscle/joints - vibratory/depth/pressure. In contrast, the sensory afferent specializations - sight, hearing, equilibrium, taste/smell - occur localized, and sensory receptors are complex.

Eye and Vision

It captures the light rays (emission) by focusing the appropriate rays to the correct location.

It focuses light rays on the retinal surface (about 20 cm) into a focused or convergent

The anterior segment contains the cornea, which is a refracting front that helps focus light rays into the lens. The lens is a refracting front that helps to refract the convergent light rays into a focused image on the retina. The posterior segment contains the vitreous body, which is a refracting front that helps to refract the convergent light rays into a focused image on the retina.

Light rays of the eye are refracted by the cornea and the lens. Light rays are refracted at different angles. Thus, in the human eye, light rays are refracted at different angles.
