10,000 killed by asbestos in schools

Children are still taught in thousands of buildings riddled with the lethal material

Steve Roggen, Harry Miller and Ben Gribble

Former pupils and teachers are describing how they were taught in schools riddled with asbestos.

An estimated 10,000 pupils and staff have been killed by exposure to the substance since the 1950s.

Among them was Chris Willis, a 34-year-old father of a 10-year-old son, who died of cancer after working in a school riddled with asbestos.

Asbestos was used in schools for decades but the danger is still being ignored by the government.

The government should establish a national register of buildings with asbestos, which could be closed to the public, and should ensure all schools are safe.

Violence in France after shot boy's burial

A worker in the Place de la Concorde in central Paris attempts to put out a fire started during a demonstration by several hundred people against the police shooting of a teenager on Tuesday

Marie Perle

In the village of a cemetery in the suburbs of Paris, the 27-year-old mother of a boy who was shot by police last week is seen in a state of grief.

Just a few hours later, however, violence erupted in the city streets as thousands of people gathered to protest against the police shooting.

The authorities were forced to use violence in the heart of Paris and in the suburbs, with rioters attacking police and burning shops.
