

Special Senses - Vision

Normally, sensory information is transmitted as a message-carrying action potential to the brain and interpreted accordingly. When triggered, these receptors send action potentials along different pathways to the brain for interpretation. Thus, these specializations of the nervous system allow the body to sense and adjust to changing conditions in the environment very efficiently.

Five basic categories of general sensation that occur across the organism include temperature changes, and touch/pressure, vibratory/depth/pressure, pain, and the receptors either special senses: sight, hearing, equilibrium, taste/smell, vision, olfaction, and hearing, and vision, taste, smell, and hearing.

Eye and Vision

It interprets the different light wavelengths by detecting the appropriate receptors in the human eye.

It is the part of the eye that receives the light rays and focuses them on the retina to form an inverted image.

The anterior segment contains the cornea, which is the outermost layer of the eye. It is the part of the eye that is exposed to the environment. The cornea is a transparent, curved structure that helps to refract the light rays. The iris and ciliary muscles are located in the anterior segment of the eye. The iris is a muscular structure that controls the amount of light that enters the eye. The ciliary muscles are responsible for changing the shape of the lens to focus light on the retina.

It is the part of the eye that is responsible for focusing light on the retina. It is a biconvex lens that is held in place by the ciliary muscles. The lens is made of a transparent, gelatinous substance that is composed of different layers. The outer layer is the capsule, and the inner layer is the cortex. The lens is surrounded by the vitreous humor, which is a clear, gelatinous substance that fills the eye.

Cornea - transparent, curved structure

Iris - muscular structure

Ciliary Muscles - muscular structure

Lens - biconvex structure

Vitreous Humor - clear, gelatinous substance

Retina - light-sensitive structure
