Political Action Groups

What is a Political Action Group?

A Political Action Group (PAC) is a group of people who get together to support a candidate or a political party. They can raise money and use it to help the candidate or party. They can also help with other things like getting out the vote.

The Federal Election Commission (FEC) is the agency that regulates PACs. It makes sure that PACs follow the rules. The FEC also keeps track of how much money PACs raise and how they spend it.

Political Action Groups

Political Action Groups (PACs) are groups of people who get together to support a candidate or a political party. They can raise money and use it to help the candidate or party.

The Federal Election Commission (FEC) is the agency that regulates PACs. It makes sure that PACs follow the rules. The FEC also keeps track of how much money PACs raise and how they spend it.

PACs can be set up by individuals, corporations, unions, and other groups. They can raise money from these sources and use it to help their favorite candidate or party.

PACs can also be set up by political parties. They can raise money from party members and use it to help their party's candidates.

PACs can also be set up by interest groups. They can raise money from people who share the same interests and use it to help their favorite candidate or party.

PACs can also be set up by foreign countries. They can raise money from people in other countries and use it to help their favorite candidate or party.

There are many different types of PACs. Some are set up to support a specific candidate, while others are set up to support a political party. Some are set up to support a specific issue, while others are set up to support a specific group of people.

What are the rules for PACs?
