Immigration

How Did Immigration Change?

Immigration changed dramatically from the late 19th century to the 1920s. In the late 19th century, most immigrants came from Europe. By the 1920s, most immigrants came from Asia and Latin America.

What Did Immigrants Do?

In 1890, the majority of immigrants were Irish, Italian, and German. By 1920, the majority of immigrants were from Eastern Europe, including Poland, Russia, and Austria. These immigrants often worked in factories and mines.

Immigration and the U.S.

Immigration helped the U.S. become a world power. It provided the labor force for the industrial revolution. However, it also led to the rise of nativism and the passage of the Immigration Act of 1924.

During the 1920s, the U.S. government passed laws that restricted immigration. The Immigration Act of 1924 set a quota for the number of immigrants from each country. This act was based on the number of people of that country who lived in the U.S. in 1890.

Immigrants arriving at Ellis Island in the early 20th century. Many immigrants were from Europe.

The New Immigrants

The new immigrants came from Eastern Europe and other areas of Europe. They were often poor and uneducated. They came to the U.S. to find work and a better life. Many of these immigrants were from Poland, Russia, and Austria. They often worked in factories and mines.

Ellis Island

Ellis Island was the main immigration station in the U.S. from 1892 to 1954. It was located in New York City. Many immigrants passed through Ellis Island before coming to the U.S. Some were turned away because they were sick or did not have the money to pay for their passage.

Some immigrants were turned away because they were considered a threat to the U.S. Some were turned away because they were from countries that were not on the list of allowed countries. The Immigration Act of 1924 set a quota for the number of immigrants from each country. This act was based on the number of people of that country who lived in the U.S. in 1890.
