Summary

The 1910s placed a large emphasis on isolation, including immigration restrictions. They advocated an uninvolved participation in any global events, unless it was in direct support of our national interests. This included a focus on the war in Europe, but not on participating in any of the global events. This strategy allowed us to stay neutral and avoid any military involvement in any global events until the United States.

How does the experience of American Isolationism in WWI compare to current US foreign policy in WWII?

Immigration laws were strict, and the US government was not involved in any global events. This policy, and the isolationist stance, allowed us to stay neutral and avoid any military involvement in any global events until the United States. This strategy allowed us to stay neutral and avoid any military involvement in any global events until the United States.
