Energy flows through ecosystems from producers to consumers, while matter is recycled within the system.

The flow of energy through an ecosystem is unidirectional, starting from the sun and moving through producers to various levels of consumers.

Energy is lost at each stage of the food chain through metabolic processes, heat, and excretion, following the second law of thermodynamics.

Energy efficiency in ecosystems is low, with only about 1% of the energy from the sun being captured by producers.

Energy flow is represented by food chains and food webs, showing the complex interactions between different organisms in an ecosystem.
