channels Bidirectional interactions between NG2 glia and neurons are also important for synaptic function and neuronal integrity NG2 glia respond to most neuropathologies by increased proliferation and differentiation into oligodendrocytes which is critical for replacing damaged myelin after injury and in demyelinating diseases such as multiple sclerosis There is also evidence NG2 glia are capable of generating astrocytes and neurons under some circumstances The full capacity of NG2 glia is not yet clear but their key function is the lifelong generation of oligodendrocytes which is absolutely critical for CNS function and integrity
