

Teachers' attitudes effect on the implementation of the Communicative language teaching approach and its implementation in the upper secondary schools in Kosova

Abstract

This study was conducted based on the needs of the English language teachers in the upper secondary schools in Kosova. As the Core Curriculum in Kosova (2011) impels the use communicative approaches at this educational level, researches on these approaches are vital for the English teachers.

Sixteen upper secondary school English language teachers from urban and rural areas in Kosova, participated in the attitudinal questionnaire and the observation instrument of this study.

The findings of this study point out that, teachers' attitudes have a great impact on the implementation of the Communicative language teaching approach; the upper secondary school teachers in Kosova have mildly positive attitudes towards the communicative approaches; thirdly, the rural secondary schools in Kosova showed a slightly higher implementation of communicative activities in English classes.

This study indicates that upper secondary school English teachers in Kosova need a higher awareness on the relevance of the Communicative language teaching approach. These teachers may benefit from this study as it is possible to see the weaknesses and areas where they need to advance further.

I. INTRODUCTION

English as a second language, in the modern world, is widely acquired and used for communicative purposes. When we say "communicative", we have in mind the interaction between people for their needs in the everyday life. These demands pushed further the idea of having more methods and approaches in English language teaching, for the purpose of improving learners' communicative skills and hence, prepare them to use English as a second language in different situations in their life.

According to the Core curriculum in Kosova (2011), students must be competent in using the language in different situations in their everyday life, at least in an average level [1]. This claim leads directly towards finding the teaching approaches which best fulfill these requirements, in other words, it leads towards the Communicative language teaching approach.

II. LITARATURE REVIEW

A. Communicative language teaching (CLT)

There are different explanations from a number of linguists about the Communicative Language Teaching and its use. It is worth to include Richards & Rodgers [2], who describe that the principles of the Communicative Approach lie on "communicative competence", a term which was used by Hymes,[3], who contrasted the idea that possessing only the linguistic competence and acquiring the language structures separately is sufficient for learners in mastering the target language. Hymes considered that, learners, in order to actively participate in the society, should be also taught to when and where the acquired structures must be used, to express certain functions outside the classroom and in that way contribute to the society

Since communicative competence is considered the main aim of this approach, according to Richards et al. [4], generally it includes the following competences:
