

Planet Earth and its representation

Our planet, called The Earth, is part of the Solar System. In the centre of this system – located in the Milky Way - there is a very important star, the Sun. Earth is the third planet from the Sun, and it gives us light and heat. This is the reason why life is possible in our planet.

Scientists are not very sure, but they believe the Universe started millions years ago, after a huge explosion called "Big Bang". This Universe - that is everything that exist all over – contains a lot of astronomical objects, such as planets, asteroids, comets, or natural satellites. For example, the Moon, the one and only satellite of the Earth.

When we speak about Earth's atmosphere, we shall say that the atmosphere (which is the outer and gaseous part of the Earth, formed by the troposphere, the stratosphere and, last but not least, the ionosphere) allows life to exist, because it is formed by layers and layers of gases which contain oxygen we breathe, and also protect us from the harmful radiation of ultraviolet rays.

As everybody know, the Earth is in movement in two different ways: 1 – It rotates on its axis, so we have days and nights..., 2 – It revolves around the Sun, producing the four seasons.

Humans have always wanted represent the Earth. Always! From the early times.

At the beginning, maps were drawn by navigators, explorers and soldiers, but those maps weren't accurate. However, nowadays, maps are very detailed because we use advanced technologies, like GPS. It means "Global Positioning System".
