

Activity: Researching Author-Editorial Choices - Examples

This lesson addresses reading writing activities across two units. Part of this problem is that many students do not have the skills to read for meaning or to make editorial decisions that support their positions on the matter. In order to do so, students do the following:

The first part of the lesson is more research-based. You will be completing an activity that will get at the choice that author is making to help you understand the author's point and structure and to understand how the author is making the choice to write the piece. Then, in a second part of the lesson, you will be comparing how this piece has influenced other people's writing that you will be doing in the next part.

Question	Ask yourself when in this story, and where, are the choices that the author is making? What are the choices that the author is making? What are the choices that the author is making? What are the choices that the author is making? What are the choices that the author is making?
Answer	In this case, you will make choices about what you suggest that in this story. The first part of the lesson is more research-based. You will be completing an activity that will get at the choice that author is making to help you understand the author's point and structure and to understand how the author is making the choice to write the piece. Then, in a second part of the lesson, you will be comparing how this piece has influenced other people's writing that you will be doing in the next part.
Discussion	Write a paragraph about anything that you find interesting, either a collection of your own experiences or a collection of stories that you find interesting. You can choose from the story that is listed in something that you find interesting. The choices that you make in choosing to write your own writing. How do you think that the author is making the choice to write the piece? How do you think that the author is making the choice to write the piece? How do you think that the author is making the choice to write the piece? How do you think that the author is making the choice to write the piece?
Summary	What do you think that the author is making the choice to write the piece? How do you think that the author is making the choice to write the piece? How do you think that the author is making the choice to write the piece? How do you think that the author is making the choice to write the piece?
