

10. If you are given different frequency table, which column will be the class frequency table?

Answer:

Column 2, because it has the highest number of categories in the table.

Example: The following table represents the distribution of various political parties in the 1998 US election. The following table represents the frequency distribution of candidates in the 1998 US election.

Answer:

In the graph, the height of each bar represents the frequency of the class, and the width of the bar represents the number of observations in each category.

Example: The following bar graph shows the number of students in each grade level in a school. The x-axis represents the grade level, and the y-axis represents the number of students.

Answer:

In a histogram, the height of each bar represents the frequency of the observations in that class. The width of the bar represents the class interval, and the area of the bar represents the number of observations in that class.
