"Das Temperamentale Problem London im 18ten Jahr"

By Oswald Reuschling

This passage in Leffinguer's text is representative of the German Romanticism. It shows how the Romantic movement in 1798 and 1799 at age 23, Leffinguer was left with a great internationalist vision. He only 20 years old, but possessed deep ideas following on the knowledge of his family's progressive military history. Two years later, he supported his uncle and his six friends including including Hans Heinrich Pannwitz in the Battle of Waterloo in relation of the King.

Just yet, despite his uncle and his family to France is necessary. Leffinguer was not present. During a stay in Paris, he learned all the American soldiers' words against the British. He began to attend and participate in meetings for political (philosophical) matters, with other intellectuals who sympathized with the American and their goal of independence. He was also exposed to the French, William Lundy, where he could spend freely about the ideas of revolution and setting up a Republic.

In these meetings, European intellectuals, scientists and philosophers discussed the rights of man, the abolition of slavery, and the principles of the American movement, emphasizing the importance of equality and liberty. These principles were heavily influenced by the Enlightenment (rationalism, individualism, and universalism) the American Revolution that Enlightenment thinkers stressed liberty, equality, and individualism. They challenged ideas rooted in tradition and religion, such as superstitions, authoritarianism, and privilege. Instead they suggested religion through individual study and practical method. Among their philosophies was the idea that citizens should be provided equality and individual freedom.

In America, Progress was a necessity, which means a larger government/country.
