

INTRODUCTION TO ASPEN PLUS SIMULATION

What is Process Simulation/Analysis?

The purpose of process simulation is to model and predict the performance of a process. It involves the development of the process into the mathematical elements (e.g. units) and subsequent study of performance. The process identification is e.g. flowsheet, composition, temperature, pressure, production equipment sizes, etc. It can predict the energy analysis, equipment flows, equipment utility requirements, material requirements and integrate sub-processes identified in e.g. ASPEN Plus. In addition, process analysis can provide the cost of production, energy to provide and recover (efficiency). Therefore, in process simulation, you are given the process flowsheet and description and are required to predict process output (Fig. 1). The tool used here is ASPEN Plus. It is a computer-aided software which uses the underlying physical relationships (e.g., material and energy balances, thermodynamic properties, rate equations to predict process performance (e.g., stream properties, operating conditions, and equipment sizes).

Fig. 1. Process Simulation Problem

There are several advantages of computer-aided simulation:

- Allows the designer to quickly test the performance of complex process alternatives and provide feedback to the process synthesis activities.
- Can be incorporated with process synthesis to finding optimum integrated designs.
- Minimizes experimental and scale-up efforts.
- Explains process flexibility and sensitivity by answering "what-if" questions.
- Quantitatively predicts the process and plant design/operating process performance.

Despite these advantages, there are some limitations including the increasing number of complex plant simulation:

- It is hard to quickly test the simplified RST simulation.
- The computational cost increases as plant size (e.g. plant size) grows the simulation.
- Not all RST simulation predicts that the simulated model under physical process conditions may not be able to allow the simulation to occur after the number of plant trials.
