A Case Study of Small-Scale Farmers in South Africa Using Design Science Research Agyei Fosu,2024-06-27 Document from the year 2024 in the subject Computer Science Commercial Information Technology Nelson Mandela Metropolitan University School of Information Technology language English abstract In this book the author demonstrates how Design Science Research DSR approach can be used to design a tailor made technology adoption assessment framework to gauge small scale farmers found in developing nations marginalised rural communities adoption of ICT The book presents a practical approach to illustrate the implementation process by using small scale farmers found in the deeply isolated rural areas of Amathole District Municipality ADM of South Africa as a case study The electronic environment e environment created by the digital age continues to see the adoption of various technologies like Information and Communication Technologies ICT by individuals nations and organisations to facilitate development effectiveness efficiency enhance productivity and business opportunities Technology adoption assessment emerged alongside the rapid adoption of technology in the digital age as a tool to evaluate the factors or determinants that influence and contribute to technology adoption In the case of developing nations rural societies because of the socio economic dynamics of the marginalised rural communities the design of the assessment tools to gauge technology adoption should capture factors such as suitability relevance of the technology as well as local context and capacity social implications and availability of resources to address the unique challenges faced by the region This makes the design of technology adoption assessment tools to gauge adoption of technology among marginalised communities in developing countries to follow a tailor made approach   Reports of Cases Determined in the Courts of Appeal of the State of California ,1991   Handbook for Evaluating Knowledge-Based Systems Leonard Adelman,Sharon L. Riedel,1997-04-30 Knowledge based systems are increasingly found in a wide variety of settings and this handbook has been written to meet a specific need in their widening use While there have been many successful applications of knowledge based systems some applications have failed because they never received the corrective feedback that evaluation provides for keeping development focused on the users needs in their actual working environment This handbook provides a conceptual framework and compendium of methods for performing evaluations of knowledge based systems during their development Its focus is on the users and subject matter experts evaluation of the usefulness of the system and not on the developers testing of the adequacy of the programming code The handbook permits evaluators to systematically answer the following kinds of questions Does the knowledge based system meet the users task requirements Is the system easy to use Is the knowledge base logically consistent Does it meet the required level of expertise Does the system improve performance The authors have produced a handbook that will serve two audiences a tool that can be used to create knowledge based systems practitioners developers and evaluators and a framework that will stimulate more research in the area academic researchers and students To accomplish this the handbook is built around a conceptual framework that integrates the different types of evaluations into the system of development process The kinds of questions that can be answered and the methods available for answering them will change throughout the system development life cycle And throughout this process one needs to know what can be done and what can t It is this dichotomy that addresses needs in both the practitioner and academic research audiences Valuing Environmental Goods Ronald G.
