

Human Genetics Lab

Exploring Human Genetics

Genetics is the study of how traits are passed from parents to offspring. In this lab, you will explore the inheritance of a trait called "tongue rolling" (the ability to curl the tip of your tongue into a U-shape).

Procedure:

1. Determine if you can roll your tongue. Record your result in the table below.

2. Interview your family members to determine if they can roll their tongues. Record their results in the table below.

3. Analyze the data to determine the probability of offspring inheriting the trait.

4. Complete a chi-square analysis to determine if the observed results differ significantly from the expected results.

Individual	Can Roll Tongue (Yes/No)	Genotype (RR/Rr/rR/rr)
You
Parent 1
Parent 2
Parent 3
Parent 4
Parent 5
Parent 6
Parent 7
Parent 8
Parent 9
Parent 10

Expected Results:

If both parents are heterozygous (Rr), the expected results for offspring are:

- 75% chance of being able to roll their tongue (RR or Rr)
- 25% chance of not being able to roll their tongue (rr)

Chi-Square Analysis:

Use the following formula to calculate the chi-square value:

$$\chi^2 = \sum \frac{(O - E)^2}{E}$$

Where O is the observed number of individuals and E is the expected number of individuals.

Compare your calculated chi-square value to the critical value in the chi-square distribution table to determine if the observed results differ significantly from the expected results.

Collect data and complete chi square analysis
