

Provisions for assessment of existing structures in the second-generation concrete Eurocode

Craig Cicco examines ways in which the second-generation of Eurocode 2 will facilitate the assessment of existing concrete-framed structures.

EN 1992-1-1 (2004) (referred to as EN 1992-1) includes additional provisions that enable it to be used for assessment of existing structures. This article outlines some of these provisions, which are likely to be of assistance when using Eurocode 2 to assess concrete-framed structures. These include:

- determining characteristic material properties for assessment
- adjusting design loads or factors where testing is used to determine material properties
- determining values of deterioration
- load lifting force and anchorage lengths of bar ends
- dealing with existing structures' capacity to the current situation
- design rules/provisions for assessment of their resistance.

Material properties

EN 1992-1-1 (2004) requires characteristic values of material properties to assess the existing structure. Annex E provides guidance for how users to obtain relevant values for assessment. It introduces what EN 1992-1-1 (2004) refers to as the 'existing concrete strength from testing'. It provides a range of factors to adjust to determine f_{ck} from f_{ctd} (taking some provision for 'deterioration' where testing is not to be carried at the region being assessed). Additional information is provided to the standard to enable characteristic values of steel strength or reinforcement to be determined from testing should steel grades used in the structure not be available from relevant authorities.

The UK National Annex committee is presently reviewing this factor for determining f_{ck} from f_{ctd} . It may require some adjustments to the characteristic values to assess agreement with values obtained from EN 1992-1-1 (2004) and the UK National Annex, taking into account the ability to adjust design factors for partial to Annex A of the new standard. It may also consider different methods of determining f_{ck} from f_{ctd} where some concrete has been cast in the right test position, such as using the results of 'representative tests' performed in-situ using cores, along with relevant provisions in EN 12601 (2001).

Partial material factors

Annex A of the new standard provides new tables for partial material factors to be applied based on material test results from the structure. This should generally reduce the value of these factors, when a low coefficient of variation of material strength is obtained from testing, which is beneficial for assessed members generally. The standard permits test data available from records to also be used where suitable and appropriate.

Deterioration

Provision is made for deterioration of steel frames is generally not used. The spirit of the provisions is to allow an issue associated with deterioration, but to consider it separately to typical types of deterioration and their impact. It also clearly provides guidance on when assessment of reinforcement is likely to affect the provision of the test.

Other bars

There has been a lot of discussion on EN 1992-1-1 (2004). The standard introduces many changes Eurocode 2, which are detailed in concrete articles. The provisions are however a new extended-member model of steel, one that was developed during the drafting of the standard (Pohlmann et al.). The provisions also cover the variation of load resulting from variable dead loads.

Provision is made for members that, for reasons that concern the nature of structural lengths, must be analysed using these provisions in certain circumstances. Other established methods of assessing the point of zero force are available in the UK, including those outlined by National Highway (2000). These may more closely with British provisions in EN
