ABSTRACT

Non-intrusive load monitoring, or energy disaggregation, aims to separate household energy consumption data collected from a single point of measurement into appliance-level consumption data. In recent years, the field has rapidly expanded due to increased interest as national deployments of smart meters have begun in many countries. However, empirically comparing disaggregation algorithms is currently virtually impossible. This is due to the different data sets used, the lack of reference implementations of these algorithms and the variety of accuracy metrics employed. To address this challenge, we present the Non-intrusive Load Monitoring Toolkit (NILMTK): an open source toolkit designed specifically to enable the comparison of energy disaggregation algorithms in a reproducible manner. This work is the first research to compare multiple disaggregation approaches across multiple publicly available data sets. Our toolkit includes parsers for a range of existing data sets, a collection of preprocessing algorithms, a set of statistics for describing data sets, two reference benchmark disaggregation algorithms and a suite of accuracy metrics. We demonstrate the range of reproducible analyses which are made possible by our toolkit, including the analysis of six publicly available data sets and the evaluation of both benchmark disaggregation algorithms across such data sets.

1. INTRODUCTION

Non-intrusive load monitoring (NILM), or energy disaggregation, aims to break down a household's aggregate electricity consumption into individual appliances [1]. The motivations for such a process are threefold. First, informing a household's occupants of how much energy each appliance consumes empowers them to take steps towards reducing their energy consumption [2]. Second, personalised feedback can be provided which quantifies the savings of certain appliance-specific advice, such as the financial savings when an old inefficient appliance is replaced by a new efficient appliance. Third, if the NILM system is able to determine the time of use of each appliance, a recommender system would be able to inform the household's occupants of the savings of deferring appliance use to a time of day when electricity is either cheaper or has a lower carbon footprint.

Such benefits have drawn significant interest in the field since its inception 25 years ago. In recent years, the combination of smart meter deployments [3, 4] and reduced hardware costs of household electricity sensors has led to a rapid expansion of the field. Such rapid growth over the past five years has been evidenced by the wealth of academic papers published, international meetings held (e.g. NILM 2012<sup>1</sup> and EPRI NILM 2013<sup>2</sup>), startup companies founded (e.g. Bidgely and Neurio) and data sets released (e.g. REEDS [5], BLUED [6] and Smart* [7]).

However, three core obstacles currently prevent the direct comparison of state-of-the-art approaches, and as a result may be impeding progress within the field. To the best of our knowledge, each contribution to date has only been evaluated on a single data set and consequently it is hard to assess whether such approaches generalise to new households. Furthermore, many researchers sub-sample data sets to select specific households, appliances and time periods, making experimental results more difficult to reproduce. Second, newly proposed approaches are rarely compared against the same benchmark algorithms, further increasing the difficulty in empirical comparisons of performance between different publications. Moreover, the lack of reference implementations of these state-of-the-art algorithms often leads to the reimplementation of such approaches. Third, many papers target different use cases for NILM and therefore the accuracy of their proposed approaches are evaluated using a different set of performance metrics. As a result the nu-
