Meetings, Expositions, Events and Conventions Fenich,2008-09 Proceedings of 1995 IEEE Annual International Engineering Management Conference, 28-30 June 1995, Singapore Say Wei Foo,1995 Network Analysis and the organisation of events Alexandra Becker,2002-03-19 Inhaltsangabe Abstract Within the framework of this thesis a questionnaire based survey was carried out among British conference organisers to find out the extent to which the use of project network techniques as a planning and monitoring tool has become widespread which advantages or disadvantages it has when used in conference management and on which factors the use of PNT depends In conference related literature little attention is paid to these techniques their existence is only mentioned in a brief sentence if at all However conference management is project management and therefore a systematic formalised planning approach should be imperative The survey revealed that PNT s are not a commonly used planning tool among conference organisers Only one of the 63 respondents indicated that they use network analysis software Reasons for not using network analysis include the costs and above all the ignorance about its benefits Popular techniques to plan and monitor events are hand written or computer stored tasklists For particular requirements such as registration badging invoicing etc meeting planning software is used However it is not used very often for scheduling and budgeting which are the two main areas of application of network analysis The survey and a closer look at commercial meeting planning software reveal that network analysis features are not incorporated Cross tabulations between the variable Use of meeting planning software and demographic and company specific factors age sex position nature of organisation number of employees number of events organised each year revealed that there is a general tendency to not use meeting planning software However generalisations cannot be made because the number of respondents within the different response categories is generally too low to allow for valid statistical statements

Knowledge-Based Intelligent Information and Engineering Systems Mircea Gh. Negoita,2004-10-14 We were very pleased to once again extend to the delegates and we are pleased to th say our friends the warmest of welcomes to the 8 International Conference on Knowledge Based Intelligent Information and Engineering Systems at Wellington stitute of Technology in Wellington New Zealand The KES conferences attract a wide range of interest The broad focus of the c ference series is the theory and applications of computational intelligence and em gent technologies Once purely a research field intelligent systems have advanced to the point where their abilities have been incorporated into many conventional application areas The quest to encapsulate human knowledge and capabilities in domains such as reasoning problem solving sensory analysis and other complex areas has been avidly pursued This is because it has been demonstrated that these abilities have definite practical applications The techniques long ago reached the point where they are being exploited to provide commercial advantages for companies and real beneficial effects on profits KES 2004 provided a valuable mechanism for delegates to obtain a profound view of the latest intelligent systems research into a range of algorithms tools and techniques KES 2004 also gave delegates the chance to come into contact with those applying intelligent systems in diverse commercial areas The combination of theory and practice represents a uniquely valuable opportunity for appreciating the full spectrum of intelligent systems activity and the state of the art
