

Cellular Respiration: Understanding Energy

Energy and Cellular Respiration

Energy is the ability to do work. In biology, energy is often measured in kilocalories (kcal) or kilojoules (kJ). Cellular respiration is the process by which cells convert the energy stored in glucose into a form that can be used by the cell. This process occurs in the mitochondria and involves several steps: glycolysis, the Krebs cycle, and the electron transport chain. The overall equation for cellular respiration is:

$$C_6H_{12}O_6 + 6O_2 \rightarrow 6CO_2 + 6H_2O + \text{Energy}$$

The energy released during cellular respiration is used to power various cellular processes, such as muscle contraction, active transport, and biosynthesis. The amount of energy released from the breakdown of one mole of glucose is approximately 2870 kcal (12000 kJ).

The energy released during cellular respiration is used to power various cellular processes, such as muscle contraction, active transport, and biosynthesis. The amount of energy released from the breakdown of one mole of glucose is approximately 2870 kcal (12000 kJ). This energy is stored in the form of ATP (Adenosine Triphosphate), which is the primary energy currency of the cell. ATP is used to power a wide range of cellular activities, from the contraction of muscles to the synthesis of proteins and nucleic acids.
