ABSTRACT

The present study aims to look into the problems faced by Pashto speakers, while learning English. The study particularly focuses on the pronunciation of English consonants, which are not found in Pashto phonemic inventory. It further looks into the role of L1 in the pronunciation of the target English consonants. The study identifies that five English consonants namely, the labio-dental voiceless fricative /θ/, the labiodental voiced fricative /ð/, the dental voiceless fricative /θ/, the dental voiced fricative /ð/ and the post-alveolar voiced fricative /ʒ/ are problematic for Pashto speakers. The study further shows that these consonants are replaced by L1 sounds: 1) English labio dental fricative /θ, ð/ are pronounced as bilabial voiceless stop /p/ and bilabial approximant /m/; 2) English dental fricatives /θ, ð/ are replaced by dental stops /t, d/; 3) palatal voiced fricative /ʒ/ is replaced by palato-alveolar voiced affricate /dʒ/. It is suggested that English language learners with Pashto background should be properly trained to acquire correct English pronunciation.

Keywords: acquisition, retroflex

INTRODUCTION

English language learning has been the main concern of so many studies, but most of the studies have not always taken into account the background knowledge of the mother tongue of L2 learners. Similarities among languages help the learners and differences hinder their L2 learning (Catherine and Long 2003). Although each language has subsystems (phonetics, phonology, morphology, syntax) where transfer from L1 may be realized, but the widespread transfer is conceded in phonetics and phonology in contrast to morphology and syntax (Dulay, Burt & Krashan 1982). Moreover, there are ways to measure the ease or difficulty that learners have with each system of language, which may be applied for L2 learning as a whole (Leather & James 1996, Odlin 1989). The similarities and differences between languages (the target language and any other language which one has acquired previously) influence the overall performance level of learners in learning the target language (Odlin 1989).

Pashto has about forty to fifty million speakers. It is spoken in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Iran as a native language. It is spoken in the Afghan portion of Afghanistan (Hallberg 1992, Penzle 1955). It is the official language of Afghanistan today besides Dari. It is the provincial language in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (KPK) province of Pakistan. Pashto has the following five major dialects:

- (1) North-Eastern (Yusuzia) Dialect
- (2) North-Western (Central) Dialect
- (3) South-Eastern (Quetta) Dialect
- (4) South-Western (Kandahar) Dialect
- (5) Middle Tribal Dialect
