Abstract

This research study investigated the impact of Working Capital Management Practices (WCMP) on firm value in Sri Lankan companies. Data were gathered from a sample of 74 companies listed in the Colombo Stock Exchange covering seven business sectors for period of 2005 to 2009.

Firms' Aggressive Working Capital Management Practice (AWCMP), Moderative Working Capital Management Practice (MWCMP) and Conservative Working Capital Management Practice (CWCMP) were used as independent variables. Firm value measured in terms of Market Value Added (MVA) and Economic value Added (EVA) was employed as dependent variable in the study. The panel regression analysis was employed.

The results indicate that there is a statistically significant negative relationship between CWCMP and MVA and it further explains the firms that follow MWCMP yield higher MVA than the firms with CWCMP. Similarly, it indicates that there is a significant negative relationship between AWCMP and EVA, providing further evidence that the firms with AWCMP generate lower EVA than that of the firms with MWCMP. Accordingly, the results conclude that the firms following MWCMP improved both MVA and EVA of the firms in Sri Lanka.

examined using EViews version 10 The finding reveals that the average collection period inventory conversion period average payment period and cash conversion cycle have an insignificant negative relationship with profitability In the case of firm size its relationship with profitability is positively significant The value of R square reveals that our model is capturing 58% variation from independent and control variables The value of F statistics indicates that our model is well fitted In general collection payments from customers earlier and paying suppliers longer keeping the product in stock less time are all related to positive performance Therefore managers can increase a firm s profitability by improving the performance of management of working capital components The study in this case is done with delicate methods and proper sample models taken from verified sources
