

Chapter 1 - Sociology and the Real World

1. What is Sociology?

- a. Sociology has roots in Latin and Greek, socius and logos and can be defined as
  - i. The systematic or scientific study of human society and social behavior.
- b. The scope could be from the entire structure of society, a large-scale institution, or down to small groups and relationships between individuals.
- c. Howard Becker suggested sociology can be best understood as the study of people "doing things together."
- d. Humans are essentially social beings, our survival is contingent on the fact that we live in various groups (families, neighborhoods, dorms, etc.) but our sense of self derives from our membership in society.
- e. One way to better understand sociology is to contrast it with other social sciences such as anthropology, psychology, economics, political science, and sometimes history, geography, and communication studies.
- f. Like history, sociology compares the past and the present in order to understand both. Unlike history, sociology is more likely to focus on contemporary society.
- g. Sociology is interested in society at all levels of development, while anthropology is more likely concentrated on traditional or small, indigenous cultures.
- h. Sociology looks at a range of social institutions, while economics or political science focus on a single institution.
- i. Like geography, sociology considers the relationship of people to places.
- j. Like communication studies, sociology examines human connections at both the social and the interpersonal levels.
- k. Finally, sociology looks at the individual in relationship to external social forces, whereas psychology specializes in internal states of mind.

2. Glossary

- a. Sociology
  - i. The systematic or scientific study of human society and social behaviors, from large-scale institutions and mass culture to small groups and individual interactions.
- b. Society
  - i. A group of people who shape their lives in aggregate and patterned ways that distinguish their group from others.
- c. Social Sciences
  - i. The disciplines that use the scientific method to examine the social world.

3. How to Think Like a Sociologist

- a. Overview
  - i. The first step is to develop what we call the sociological perspective, which is also referred to as taking a sociological approach or thinking sociologically.
  - ii. It means looking at the world in a unique way and seeing it in a whole new light.
- b. Practical vs. Scientific Knowledge
