Chemicals in Medicine

Chemical substances used for the treatment of diseases and to reduce the suffering from pain are called medicines or drugs. A medicine is a chemical substance that cures the disease and is not only safe to use but also not cause any addiction or much toxicity while a drug cures disease and may cause side effects and creates addiction etc. e.g., Penicillin is a medicine while Heroin is a drug.

Drug — Target interaction

- Proteins which act as biological catalysts in the body are called enzymes.
- Proteins which are crucial to communication system in the body are called receptors.
- Proteins which carry polar molecules across the membranes are called carrier proteins.

(1) Enzymes as Drug Targets

(i) Catalytic action of enzymes

- The substrate molecules bind to the amino acid residues of the protein present on the active site of the enzyme through a variety of interactions such as hydrogen bonding, dipole-dipole interactions, van der Waals interactions and ionic bonding. These binding forces should be strong enough to hold the substrate long enough so that the enzyme can catalyse the reaction, but weak enough to allow the products to depart after their formation.

Definitions

A medicine is a chemical substance which cures the disease, is safe to use, has negligible toxicity and drug is a chemical substance which also cures the disease but is habit forming, causes addiction and has serious side effects.

Concept Ladder

The drugs in our body can be administered by oral, intravenous injections which is determined by the physical and chemical properties and the site of desired action.
