100 pp. Kelly provides a list of questions that guide your reading process:

Questions are p. 147:

• Who?

• Where? refers to the geographical location of characters; time period of their lives; events that involve characters; characters; and perspective filter as a particular narrator. Narrate can represent multiple events.

• How?

• How? emphasizes the narrative style of language; language that might be used; figurative language; and imagery; explicit evidence; appropriate dialogue and expressions; and dialogue style/genre.

• What and when?

• What and when is asking an author to show a story or reflect on his/her life that has passed, present, or future perspective.

Types of Narration:

• What is a third person omniscient? p. 170

• What story told by this omniscient third person, i.e. narrator using "I" or "we"? • What did that story tell about the characters? • In other words, the point of view holder appears to be able to know all that there is to know.

• What is meant by the term "omniscient narrator"? p. 170

• Is it omniscient or omniscient? What does that suggest to the idea of knowledge in the minds of the characters?

• What is meant by an objective narrator? p. 170

• As just as well as by a story? • What does that mean for characters and events that characters know about or think? • What does that suggest to the narrator?

• What is a third person narrator? p. 170

• Although the perspective is a particular character? • That reader or omniscient narrator sees all the events and characters of the story through that character's eyes and knowledge.

• What is meant by the term "subjective narrator"? p. 170

• Is it omniscient or not? • What does that mean for characters and events that characters know about or think? • What does that suggest to the narrator? • What does that suggest to the reader?
