

The Paper Trip III

 thelastbastille.wordpress.com /2013/09/12/the-paper-trip-iii/

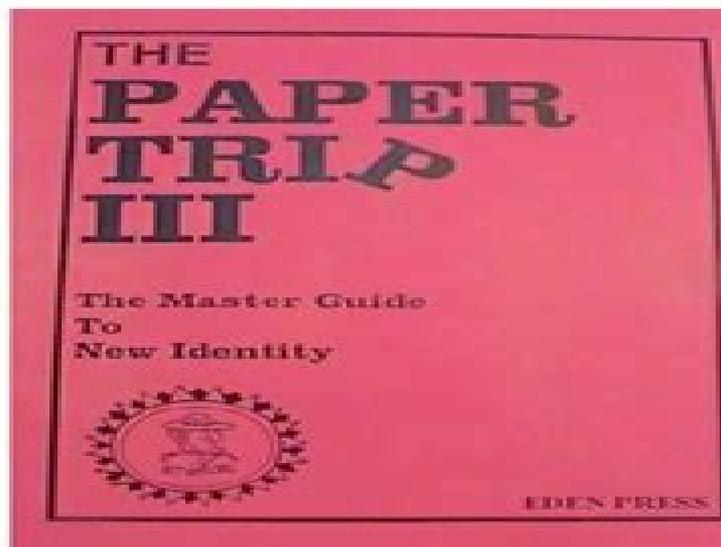

Considering the great danger to one's health and happiness that secret police infiltration into local dissident groups poses, maybe basic privacy measures aren't enough to keep someone out of legal land. A comprehensive, long-term solution is needed to thwart undercover operatives and informants, something above and beyond using disguises or keeping your own counsel. If you are willing to use an online persona while using the Internet, then why wouldn't you also be inclined to use an offline alias as well?

Nearly every American is born with legal identification documents (ID). As the original set of ID you grew up with, your entire social history is inextricably bound up with it, from where you were born to whether you are a licensed driver. "Paper-tripping," simply put, is the practice of constructing and using alternate ID; the phrase "to go on a paper-trip" refers specifically to building such a new ID from scratch.

Generally speaking, there are three levels of ID. Level One ID is nothing more sophisticated than an assumed name; it entails not so much documentation as the necessary attitude and acting skills that are truly necessary in order to pull off a convincing alias (in this regard, Level One ID is little different, if at all, from simply using disguises). Level Two ID is your walking around ID; the very minimum documentation here would be a commonly used government-issued ID, such as a driver's license (or, in a pinch, a state ID card). Level Three ID is a complete change in your ID; the minimum required documentation would be a Social Security Number (SSN) in a totally different name and birthday than from your original set.

Some will argue that only Level Three ID constitutes actual paper-tripping, and I think they are correct, for how can you acquire Level Two ID without necessarily having Level Three ID first? Level One ID is already used by many Internet users (although only some of them mask their IP addresses, which begs the question as to how seriously the rest of them value their privacy, but I digress), so you would think using a pseudonym while running errands in their area of operation (AO) wouldn't be that much different, would it? Alas, the multitudes of brave keyboard commandos and stoic cyber-warriors are shockingly nowhere to be found in their local AOs where they are needed the most!

Now, it should be kept in mind that paper-tripping is very different from becoming a state citizen. The key distinction here is that instead of escaping from the tangled web of constraints placed upon you by virtue of the fact that you are U.S. citizen, you are instead "working within the system" (as it were) in order to eventually use another mask that you can take on and off at will, thus (hopefully) providing you with the flexibility you need to evade the American police state. While paper-tripping might appear reformist because of its methodology, its intent is more in line with guerrilla warfare theory, in that the whole idea is to use your enemy's weapons against himself (he grows weaker as you grow stronger).
