Charles Bukowski was an alcoholic, a womanizer, a chronic gambler, a loner, a chronicist, a drunkard, and on his worst days a poet. He's probably the last person on earth you would ever look to for life advice or support in an emergency or hell help book.

Which is why he's the perfect place to start.

Bukowski wanted to be a writer. But for decades his work was rejected by almost every magazine, newspaper, journal, agent, and publisher he submitted to. He wrote and finished they said books (including Hamlet) and as they stacks of rejection slips piled up, the weight of his failure convinced him that even an alcohol-fueled depression that would follow him for most of his life.

Bukowski had a day job and a wife (he at a point offers to get paid the money and spend most of it on booze, the qualified way, the rest at the restaurant, in eight, he would drink alone and sometimes himself out money on his last day job typewriter. When he'd wake up on the floor, having passed out the night before.

Thirty years went by like this, most of it a meaningless blur of alcohol, drugs, gambling, and prostitution. Then, when Bukowski was fifty, after a lifetime of failure and self-hatred, an editor at a small independent publishing house had a strange interest in him. The editor couldn't offer Bukowski much money or much promise of sales, but he had a word of advice for the drunk loner, so he decided to take a chance on him. It was the first real shot Bukowski had ever gotten, and he realized, probably the only one he would ever get. Bukowski wrote back to the editor: "I have one of two choices: stay in the past office and produce . . . or stay on the line and show up every day and write I Hope I Don't Die."

Upon signing the contract, Bukowski wrote the first novel in three weeks. It was called Women in the Moon, in the dedication, he wrote "Thank you, nobody."
