

I AWOKE bathed in perspiration, my teeth clenched. Once again, as on countless previous nights, I had been hunted from pillar to post in a dream—shot at, tortured, scalped. But on this night, of all nights, the thought occurred to me that I might not be the only one among thousands upon thousands to be condemned to such dreams by the dictatorship. The things that filled my dreams must fill theirs, too—breathless flight across fields, hiding at the top of towers of dizzying height, cowering down below, in graves, everywhere the Storm Troopers at my heels.

I began to ask people about their dreams. "I had a dream," Mr. K., a factory owner, told me, "a dream of terror in which no shot was fired, no blood flowed. Goebbels came to my plant. He had the workers line up in two rows facing each other. I had to stand between them and lift my arm in the Hitler salute. It took me half an hour to get the arm up. Goebbels watched my efforts as though it were a spectacle, with neither approval nor disapproval. But when my arm was finally up, he said six words: 'I do not desire your salute,' and went to the door. I stood there in my own plant, amid my own people, my arm raised. Never in my life have I felt so humiliated. I stood there like that—until I woke up."

Mr. K., a man of proved courage and will power, trembled with agitation as he related the dream he had had weeks before. This dream was different. It was not born of fear of brute force. It had arisen simply from the pressure of the dictatorship upon the mind of this man. Were I to find many such dreams of mistreated souls, what a new and explicit proof against dictatorship they would furnish!

Since that night I have systematically collected the reports of dreams under dictatorship. I did not reveal my purpose in asking people for their dreams, for I wanted to avoid replies that were colored. As a matter of fact, it was not at all easy to get replies. Most people wished to forget their agonizing dreams; at any rate, they did not like to speak of them. Some I induced to talk against their own will, by relating dreams of my own or those of others. I wrote down every dream in detail.
