Chapter 2: The Person's Rights

You are assisting a person with range of motion (ROM) exercises. The person does not want to participate and tells you to leave the room. Does the person have the right to refuse? What will you do? Does the nursing center have to take action?

The person has the right to refuse. You should reintroduce the action at a later time. Report the refusal to the nurse. The nursing center may have to take action if the person is there to receive rehabilitation care. If a person will not perform certain tasks to assist in maintaining or improving his or her health status, the nursing center could become liable. The physician may need to become involved to reevaluate goals of care for the person.

Chapter 4: Ethics and Laws

During morning care, a coworker is heard telling a resident, "If you wet your pants again, I will not lay you down after lunch." What type of abuse does this statement represent? What should you do?

This is mental abuse. You should tell your coworker that this is not something he or she should say to the resident. Confirm that the person is okay. Reassure the person that you will help. You should report this to the nurse immediately. The nurse will follow up and interview the person and communicate this with his or her supervisor.

Chapter 4: Ethics and Laws

You and a coworker are assisting a resident in the shower. You go to the resident's room to get her sweater. When you return, you enter the shower room and see your coworker spraying the resident in the face with the water nozzle. Is this a type of abuse? What will you do next?

Yes, this is physical abuse. Go into the shower room and immediately stop the coworker's actions, turn the call light on, get help finding the nurse, and report what has occurred. Do not leave the resident alone with the coworker.

Chapter 5: Work Ethics

The nursing center has four scheduled CNAs assigned to the wing in which you are working. You are assigned to a resident who is combative and a fall risk. One of your coworkers walks past your combative resident's room and sees the resident trying to get out of bed. What should
