1.

English – the Working Tongue of the Global Village

English has become the working tongue of the huge “global village” : that’s how a Canadian writer defined the world transformed by the media. The most remarkable thing about English today is that it is used as a supplementary language by so many people all around the world.

Infact, non native speaker are much more than native speaker, and it is estimated that a quarter of the world’s population know English, at different levels, of course.

Today, about 6800 languages are spoken around the globe and what gives English its special connotation is the fact that it’s a mean of international communication: it’s big business and the most taught language all over the world. People want to learn it for different purposes: leisure, entertainment, business, work, travel, and so on.

English is spoken in circles

An Indian-American scholar has created a model to let us think of English in three different circles: the Inner Circle, the Outer Circle and the Expanding Circle. The Inner Circle includes countries where English is spoken as first language. The Outer Circle is used to represent countries where English is spoken as second or semi-official language and finally the biggest, the Expanding Circle which includes countries where English is learned and used as a foreign language.

The Inner Circle

The Inner Circle is composed by three geographical blocks, in which 320 million people speak English as a first language: the New World (the United States, Canada and the West Indies); Britain and Ireland in Europe; New Zealand and South Africa in the Southern Hemisphere.

What’s surprising, is that neither in the United States, nor in Britain, has English ever been formally declared the official language. Infact, there’s more than one language in the same country: for 40 million Americans the first language is Spanish, Canada is a bilingual country (English and French), the Republic of Ireland has two official language (Irish Gaelic and English).

In New Zeland and Australia English is spoken by 20 million people. So we can conclude that English is an important means of communication around the expansive Pacific basin.

South Africa is a particular case, where 11 official languages are spoken, one of which is English (bound between the Inner and Outer Circles). Althought English is not a primary language in South Africa, now it retains a dominant position, because it’s the language most used in Parliament and in higher education.

People who belong to the Inner Circle have of course a privilege because the learn for free to speak this global language and they have an advantage in many walks of life. That means that English native speakers are not willing to discover other cultures. On the other hand, among others speakers there’s the fear that English will undermine their own cultural and linguistic identities.
