Qiu,2005 Indian Journal of Industrial Relations ,1999 Guide to Indian Periodical Literature ,2000 Channel Coordination in Green Supply Chain Management Sanjeev Swami,Janat Shah,2014 Environmental consciousness has become increasingly important in present times as evident by the examples from both everyday life and business practices In the manufacturing sector the efforts to reduce the impact of environmentally harmful activities have collectively been labeled as green supply chain management Any major greening project would require efforts on the part of the entire supply chain However relatively few studies have addressed the issue of coordinating the green supply chain We address the issue of vertical coordination in a green supply chain between the players at the upstream say a manufacturer and downstream say a retailer levels of the chain In this paper we focus on an interesting problem faced by manufacturer retailer pairs e g P G and Walmart in the consumer products supply chains The manufacturer has to decide on the wholesale price and the package size of its product The manufacturer is labeled as a green manufacturer since reducing the pack size of its product would help him save on environmentally costly transportation cost Reduction in pack size helps the manufacturer also save on product packaging cost Moreover the reduced package size also results in cost savings for the retailer in terms of handling and storage The retailer decides on the retail price and the shelf space to be allocated to the green manufacturer The increase in allocation of shelf space has a demand expansion effect on the retail demand for the green manufacturer s products However the decrease in pack size has a demand reduction effect on its demand because larger pack sizes attract more consumer attention and therefore act as an advertising vehicle Further the retailer has limited shelf space and has to balance the space allocation for the green manufacturer against the potential profitability of allocating that space to other manufacturers In view of the above elements of complexity it is interesting to examine the optimal prices charged optimal reduction in size and optimal shelf space allocation in this problem We examine the problem for the cases of both integrated and decentralized channels Our results show that the total profit is greater pack sizes are smaller and shelf space allocation is greater in the integrated channel as compared to the decentralized channel Retail prices can be greater or smaller in the decentralized channel as compared to the integrated channel depending on certain values of the problem parameters These results show that clearly there is scope for channel coordination in this problem setting for better profitability and environmental benefits We propose a two part tariff scheme which effectively coordinates the green supply chain in this problem setting

INFORMS Annual Meeting Institute for Operations Research and the Management Sciences. National Meeting,2003 Improving Quality of Development Janat Shah, Sanjeev Swami,2011 With reference to India Supply Chain Contracts Under Uncertainty of Retailer Counterfeiting Naveen Sundaresan,Janat Shah,2014 We model a supply chain scenario in which the genuine manufacturer is uncertain whether a retailer sells counterfeits alongside authentic products We evaluate the optimal strategies for players under wholesale price contracts and two part tariff contracts and analyse the impact of the uncertainty of retailer counterfeiting on the manufacturer s pricing and expected profits Furthermore we investigate whether the two part tariff is more effective compared with the wholesale price contract India Janat Shah,Suresh D.
