

10. If you are given different frequency table, which column will be the class frequency table?

Answer:

Column 2, because it has the highest number of categories in the column.

Example: The following table represents the distribution of various political parties in the 1998 US election. The following table represents the number of votes for each party.

Answer:

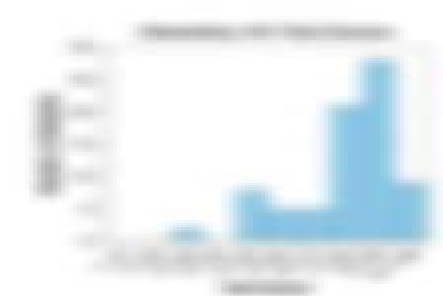

In the graph, the height of each bar represents the frequency of the class, and the width of the bar represents the number of observations in each category.

Example: The following bar graph shows the number of votes for each party in the 1998 US election. The height of each bar represents the number of votes for each party, and the width of the bar represents the number of observations in each category.

Answer:

In a histogram, the height of each bar represents the frequency of the observations in that category, and the width of the bar represents the number of observations in each category.
