New,2018-08-27 Losses of forests and their insect inhabitants are a major global conservation concern spanning tropical and temperate forest regions throughout the world This broad overview of Australian forest insect conservation draws on studies from many places to demonstrate the diversity and vulnerability of forest insects and how their conservation may be pursued through combinations of increased understanding forest protection and silvicultural management in both natural and plantation forests The relatively recent history of severe human disturbance to Australian forests ensures that reasonably natural forest patches remain and serve as models for many forest categories They are also refuges for many forest biota extirpated from the wider landscapes as forests are lost and merit strenuous protection from further changes and wider efforts to promote connectivity between otherwise isolated remnant patches In parallel the recent attention to improving forest insect conservation in harmony with insect pest management continues to benefit from perspectives generated from better documented faunas elsewhere Lessons from the northern hemisphere in particular have led to revelations of the ecological importance and vulnerability of many insect taxa in forests together with clear evidence that conservation can work in concert with wider forest uses A brief outline of the variety of Australian tropical and temperate forests and woodlands and of the multitude of endemic and often highly localised insects that depend on them highlights needs for conservation both of single focal species and wider forest dependent radiations and assemblages The ways in which insects contribute to sustained ecological integrity of these complex ecosystems provide numerous opportunities for practical conservation
