

WRITING LITERARY ARGUMENTS

Most of the research writing about literature you encounter in school is persuasive in genre and purpose. Sometimes, that research can help determine the focus of your writing. Other times, it will give you evidence of the various ways of reading literature that you can use to make your argument about a text more convincing. Other times, you will use the research to help you make a persuasive case about a literary topic that you are already interested in. The more you know about a literary topic, the more confident you will be in writing your argument, and your argument will be more convincing.

When you write a literary argument, you follow the same process you do when you write an argument about a literary topic. However, because the purpose of an argument is to convince readers, you will focus more on addressing questions to your audience than when

Planning a Literary Argument

Choosing a Debatable Topic

Arguments are persuasive only when people disagree, especially a particular issue that is up for discussion. Thus, first you will find a debatable topic about which you will write. Then, second, you will determine what evidence you will use to support your argument. A good literary debatable topic can draw about ten to twenty people into a debate. The next step is to determine what evidence about the topic you will use to support your argument, including any questions to explore the argument.

- Topic Statement: *Is the novel Anna Karenina a feminist text?*
and how does the author use narrative to explore gender inequality?
- Debatable Topic: *Is the novel Anna Karenina a feminist text?*
and how does the author use narrative to explore gender inequality?

An argument about a literary debatable topic should be written enough to read for a class or to be used as a paper topic. It should also draw disagreement, so it will have

Re-writing Pasts, Imagining Futures Gomia, Victor N., Ndi, Gilbert Shang, 2018-02-20 The papers in this volume focus on fiction and theatre in their traditional forms as well as in their encounters with novel and innovative forms and avenues of dissemination As a cultural practice that emerged from a process of protest and contestation of hegemony it is understandable that one main concern in African literature and literary criticism is the resistance against the emergence of marginalizing centers in formerly or currently marginalized societies with regard to discourses aesthetics and media of creation These new centers that sometimes undermine the strategic tactical exploitation of the relative advantage procured by each medium run the risk of leading to new forms of stratification that mitigate the import of African and African diasporic literatures The collection of essays therefore seeks to analyze the representation of pertinent socio political and historical questions in a variety of postcolonial texts from Africa and the African diasporas notably the Caribbean islands and the United States of America However far from re writing of history in a way that cedes to conservative worldviews creative writers and critics simultaneously attempt to chart ways forward for socially all inclusive futures In the context of colonial and neo colonial legacies that seem to forestall any sense of individual and collective self fulfillment contributors to this volume examine the pertinence of African fiction and theatre in imagining new vistas of re conceptualizing the postcolonial condition in ways that re galvanize the belief in an enabling future

Expanding the Canon of Early Modern Women's Writing Paul Salzman, 2010-07-12 This exciting collection of original essays on early modern women s writing offers a range of approaches to a growing field As a whole the volume introduces readers to a number of writers such as Mirabai and Liu Rushi who are virtually invisible in Anglophone scholarship and to writers who remain little known such as Elizabeth Melville Elizabeth Hatton and Jane Sharpe The volume also represents critical strategies designed to open up the emergent canon of early modern women's writing to new approaches especially those that have consolidated the integration of literary and intellectual history with an emphasis on religion legal issues and questions of genre The authors expand the methodological possibilities available to approach early modern women who wrote in a diverse number of genres from letters to poetry autobiography and prose fiction The sixteen essays are a major contribution to an area that has attracted the interest of a number of fields including literary studies history cultural studies and women's studies
