The Necessity of Living Happy and Free Robert Edward Gordon, 2026-03-18 This book argues that art's ability to embody ideas and values reveals why living happy and free is a universal human necessity It claims that an aesthetic worldview offers the most compelling framework to understand this dynamic Taking the post pandemic environment as its starting point life happiness and freedom are examined as global concepts The book's main premise contends that art is fundamentally the language of values and that artistic artifacts by their very nature are imbued with humanistic consequence A unique blend of pictorial analysis art historical reference and philosophical inquiry demonstrates what our aesthetic sensibilities reveal about life happiness and freedom within human affairs The dialogue engages concepts such as trust psychology religion mythology nostalgia honor sacrifice economics and others Overall the relationship between art aesthetics and living happy and free unearths the profound necessity for human beings to find personal and existential meaning in the world The book takes a universal and global angle on what makes us human It challenges the nationalistic tenor of the concepts of life happiness and freedom in order to uncover the humanistic root of why such values are so important to contemporary life as a function of their anthropological roots in the past
