Abstract: This study sets out to examine the extent to which taxation can be used as an indispensable instrument for the eradication of economic recession in Nigeria. Economic recession has plagued deep into the economy to the extent that monetary policies cannot serve as a hinge upon which the economy could strive. The study specifically examined the extent to which petroleum profit tax can be used as an indispensable instrument for economic recession in Nigeria; the influence of company income tax on economic recession in Nigeria and the combined long-run effect of value added tax on Nigeria's economic recession. This study employed ex-post facto research design and relied mainly on secondary data as its source of information. To achieve the objective of the study, secondary data was obtained from the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) Annual Report, Federal Inland Revenue Service (FIRS) and National Bureau of Statistics between the periods of 1994 to 2020. Descriptive statistics and Ordinary Least square were employed in testing the data collected with the aid of E-VIEWS version 10. The findings from the ordinary least square regression analysis indicate that the petroleum profit tax is a tool for ending Nigeria's economic recession. Company income has not been used effectively or efficiently to lower unemployment in Nigeria, while an increase in the value added tax has made the country's unemployment rate worse. Based on the findings, the study recommended that public authorities make sure that petroleum profit tax, company income and other source of tax income are used efficiently and effectively to provide social services and infrastructure that will help the various sectors of the economy function extremely well, thereby reducing unemployment.

Key words: Taxation, indispensable instrument, economic recession in Nigeria.

Distribution of Resources in the Nigerian Health Care System Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi, 2020-01-09 This publication representing the doctoral dissertation of Rev Fr Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi examines the healthcare system in Nigeria in the light of the Catholic social teaching He supports that the allocation of health care resources is not only a matter of organization but is also an ethical problem The debacles and failure of the Nigerian health system result from many factors including lack of will to implement the right policies on the ground corruption among the leaders lack of justice lack of respect for the dignity of each human person mismanagement and insufficient consideration and application of ethical principles in the administration of common good especially in the distribution of health care and social resources For the distribution of health care resources this doctoral dissertation suggests that priority be given to the basic health care needs of Nigerian citizens especially those who have no means of satisfying these needs themselves In this context the research affirms that great attention needs to be paid to ensuring that the principle of human dignity is completely respected in each and every policy in this important area This doctoral thesis is an ethical vision of social reality in Nigeria It proposes the person centred Catholic principles as a possible way forward in the distribution of health care resources in Nigeria It does not imply substituting the economic political and health care experts in offering technical solutions in their areas of competence The author is convinced that healthcare allocation is also an ethical issue that needs to be governed by ethical principles The key factors for choosing this theme are based on the author s knowledge of the deplorable condition of the health care system in Nigeria and his desire to save human lives Rev Fr Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi believes that we are all stewards of human life This implies a moral obligation to protect the dignity of the human person which is inseparable from protecting human life
