Immigration

How Many Immigrants Came to the U.S.?

Immigration peaked during the 1850s and 1860s, with the largest number of immigrants arriving in the United States during the 1890s. The number of immigrants arriving in the U.S. declined sharply after 1914.

What Did Immigrants Bring to the U.S.?

In 1890, the U.S. population was 62 million. By 1900, it had grown to 76 million. Immigrants brought with them a variety of skills, languages, and customs. They also brought with them a sense of adventure and a desire for a better life.

Why Did Immigrants Come to the U.S.?

Immigrants came to the U.S. for a variety of reasons. Some came to escape poverty and political persecution in their home countries. Others came to seek economic opportunities and a better life. Many came to join family members who had already immigrated to the U.S.

During the nineteenth century, immigrants who arrived in the U.S. were often treated as second-class citizens. They were often discriminated against and faced many hardships. However, over time, immigrants who arrived in the U.S. became an integral part of the American population.

Immigrants arriving at Ellis Island, New York, in the early 1900s. Many immigrants were turned away.

The New Immigrants

During the nineteenth century, immigrants to the United States had often been unskilled and uneducated. However, during the late nineteenth century, immigrants were more educated and more skilled. They were often from Europe and were known as the New Immigrants. They were often from Italy, Ireland, and other parts of Europe. They were often from the Old World.

Ellis Island was the first place where the new immigrants were brought. It was a place where immigrants were processed and then sent to their homes. It was a place where immigrants were often treated as second-class citizens. They were often discriminated against and faced many hardships. However, over time, immigrants who arrived in the U.S. became an integral part of the American population.
