

Special Senses - Vision

Normally, sensory information is transmitted as a message-carrying action potential along the body and distributed throughout. When triggered, these messages travel across long axons along different pathways within the brain for interpretation. Thus, these specializations of the nervous system allow the body to sense and adjust to changing conditions in the environment very efficiently.

Five basic categories of general sensation that occur across the: proprioception (body position, movement, and force), tactile (ability to distinguish textures), nociception (the response to pain), special senses: sight, hearing, equilibrium, taste/smell, and vision (sight), and olfaction (sense of smell) are also included.

Eye and Vision

It interprets the different light wavelengths by detecting the appropriate structures in the human eye.

It is the part of the eye that gets the external image and focuses it on the retina to form an inverted image.

The external part of the eye is the cornea, which is the outermost part of the eye. It is the part of the eye that is most sensitive to light. The cornea is made of a tough, fibrous material that helps to protect the eye. The cornea is the part of the eye that is most sensitive to light. The cornea is the part of the eye that is most sensitive to light. The cornea is the part of the eye that is most sensitive to light.

Internally made of the eye is controlled by another layer of the eye called the retina. Light rays enter at different angles. Thus, in the human eye, the light rays are focused on the retina.
