

Chemical Damp-Proof Course Insertion -the attendant problems-

Introduction

Concrete walls are usually built in contact with the ground. This means that the walls are exposed to moisture and salts from the ground. This can lead to problems such as efflorescence, staining and structural damage.

The purpose of this document is to provide information on the problems that can arise from the insertion of a chemical damp-proof course (DPC) into a concrete wall. It will discuss the different types of DPC, the problems that can arise from their use, and the measures that can be taken to avoid these problems.

The document is intended for use by building professionals and homeowners alike. It will provide a comprehensive overview of the issues involved in DPC insertion, and will offer practical advice on how to avoid these problems.

Background Information

Concrete is a porous material, and it is therefore susceptible to moisture and salt ingress. This can lead to problems such as efflorescence, staining and structural damage. A DPC is a material that is inserted into a concrete wall to prevent moisture and salt ingress.

There are two main types of DPC: bituminous and chemical. Bituminous DPC is made of a bitumen-based material, and it is applied to the surface of the concrete wall. Chemical DPC is made of a chemical-based material, and it is injected into the concrete wall.

The purpose of this document is to provide information on the problems that can arise from the insertion of a chemical DPC into a concrete wall.

Problems that can arise from the insertion of a chemical DPC

1. Cracking: The insertion of a chemical DPC can cause cracking in the concrete wall. This is because the chemical can react with the concrete, causing it to expand and crack.
2. Spalling: The insertion of a chemical DPC can cause spalling in the concrete wall. This is because the chemical can react with the concrete, causing it to become brittle and flake off.
3. Staining: The insertion of a chemical DPC can cause staining in the concrete wall. This is because the chemical can react with the concrete, causing it to become discolored.
4. Efflorescence: The insertion of a chemical DPC can cause efflorescence in the concrete wall. This is because the chemical can react with the concrete, causing it to release salts that can crystallize on the surface.

Measures that can be taken to avoid these problems

1. Use a high-quality chemical DPC: It is important to use a high-quality chemical DPC that is specifically designed for use in concrete walls. This will help to avoid the problems that can arise from the use of a low-quality product.
2. Prepare the concrete wall properly: The concrete wall should be prepared properly before the DPC is inserted. This includes cleaning the wall and ensuring that it is free of moisture and salts.
3. Use the correct application technique: The chemical DPC should be applied using the correct technique. This involves injecting the chemical into the wall at the correct depth and spacing.
4. Monitor the wall after insertion: It is important to monitor the wall after the DPC has been inserted. This will help to identify any problems that may arise, such as cracking or spalling.

Conclusion

The insertion of a chemical DPC into a concrete wall can lead to a number of problems, including cracking, spalling, staining, and efflorescence.

These problems can be avoided by using a high-quality chemical DPC, preparing the concrete wall properly, using the correct application technique, and monitoring the wall after insertion.

It is important to consult with a professional before inserting a chemical DPC into a concrete wall.
