The free destination for the socially conscious

Graphic design surrounds us. Using images, signs, symbols, colour, scale, format, graphic design shapes and informs our experience of the world. It is ubiquitous yet often overlooked.

This exhibition illuminates the ways in which graphic design influences our health: from packaging that instructs you to take correct pill to awareness campaigns to the spread of infectious diseases, the power of graphic design and its underlying methods of communication are explained.

Graphic design is a dynamic and ever-evolving discipline. Displayed alongside text are examples of advertising, illustration, interactive digital design. From self-made apps to public information films, and from signage to social media campaigns, the exhibition demonstrates the essential, often overlooked, role graphic design can play in matters of life and death.
