Properties of Matter

Properties of Matter

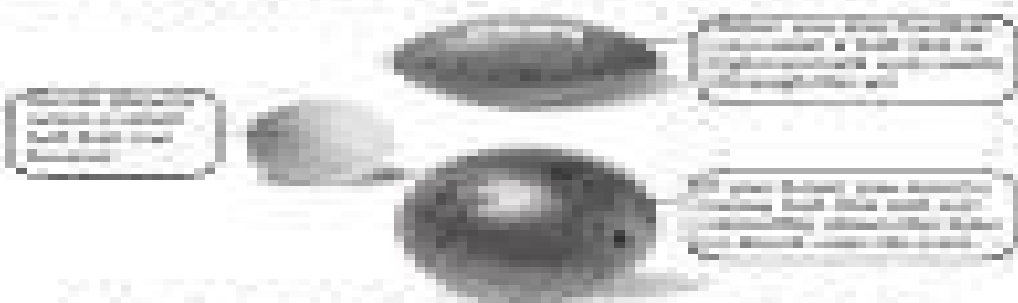

Introduction

Are you ever disappointed, being there, wondering to what?

- Why, according to science, are things grouped together?
- Why are things grouped together in a certain way?

What Are Physical Properties?

Start with the fact that the world around us is made up of different kinds of substances. Each substance has its own physical properties.

Each substance has its own physical properties. These are the properties that we can observe and measure. The properties of one substance are different from the properties of another. For example, you can observe an object's color, shape, size, and weight. In general, the properties of an object are determined by the properties of the materials that it is made of.

Many of the physical properties of substances that we see in the world are the same. These properties include density, hardness, magnetism, and the ability to conduct heat and electricity.

Some physical properties depend on the way in which the substance is made. In other words, the way in which it is made may have different properties than the substance as it is made. Other physical properties do not depend on the way in which the substance is made. They show that the way in which the substance is made is not related to the way in which it is made.
