

The Half-life of Pennies Lab

(Complete your pennies in approximately 15 minutes)

Imagine living in the year 2000 (over 2000 years ago) and still having more than 5,000 copper pennies. Luckily, nearly all of the available mineral copper in the earth (about 2% of a typical available concentration in the earth's crust) is associated with some other element, such as zinc.

Some 5,000 years ago, all of the copper in the earth was associated through an invisible mechanism of some fancy process, in the following table you will see how pennies were chosen for their half-life of decay.

Material: 500 pennies in large container with lid.

Procedure:

1. Count 500 pennies (about 1.00 kg) and place in large container.

2. Choose randomly what you think the "half" size of the pennies remaining.

Procedure: separate all pennies removed (keep separate number of pennies remaining)

Record in the descriptive table. Repeat the process with the number of pennies that remain "randomly" over the system until you reach the final measurement.

Class Table:

Student Number	Number of Pennies Remaining	Number of Pennies Removed
1	250	250
2	250	250
3	250	250
4	250	250
5	125	375
6	125	375
7	125	375
8	125	375

3. Repeat this process until you reach the final measurement. Remember to record why the coin is being "removed."

4. Create a graph to plot your data. Label the axes: "Number of Pennies" (vertical) and "Time (Penny Remaining)" (along with your class table, plotting number of coins remaining at each step).
