Summary

Biotechnology, when thoughtfully practiced, is a science that focuses on biological features of the public's environment, health, and life. Issues such as food, disease, genetically engineered foods, cloning, biotechnology and heredity impact and interact with the public's feelings and interests, which in turn influence the comprehension and acceptance of the fundamental principles of biotechnology in various and complex manners.

Other authors discuss cell technology, biotechnology, its history, its a collection of a set of techniques that involves the use of a variety of organisms that lead to products that have a wide range of applications in generating knowledge and in improving health care, food production, environmental quality, and consumer choice.

An understanding of cell identity and nature has either preoccupied or captivated its practitioners in cultivation, and its technology, remains as fundamental to its handling in the laboratory, and later its applications in the environmental, health, industrial, and medical sectors that contribute to human progress and welfare. The different articles covered by this paper focus on these basic issues, and on the application of microorganisms, plants, and animals. Moreover, a concise study on genetic engineering and recombinant DNA technology is provided. The utilization of genetic information in microbial, plant and animal cells is contributing to disease prevention and cure, gene therapy, production of biopharmaceuticals within microbes, etc. There is not even one example that involves ethics and heredity. Will the practitioners of the new Biotechnology Protocol, focus on biotechnology, research in the food and health
